Eastern countries like Turkey and Russia do not want any more intervention of the United States in their territories to fight terrorism. In this order, the delegation of Russia wants to implement an economic blockade if the United States keeps taking actions in the eastern countries. Many of the delegations are focusing on the Veto of the United States in the United Nations, but the chair suggests that this may not be the most responsible way of solving the problem. Iran is against Colombia, as Colombia judges Iran for being a country full of corruption and not having a plan for fighting terrorism like the Eastern countries do. Colombia's delegation disagrees and say that they are actually making peace in their country. World Bank suggests solutions should be based on the economical aspect, to later solve the social issues, specially not supporting the idea of economic blockades, as this could not only affect the internal economies of each country, but cause an international economic crisis.
